Living in the Snow
by Peter Lang

Peter Lang’s recent travel diary, Living in the Snow, describes the lives of the Inuit people in northern Canada. Most of us know that the Inuit live in extreme cold, build houses from snow, make clothes from animal skins, and use dog sleds to travel around. But the lives of the Inuit today are very different from the traditional lifestyle of their grandparents.

_Igloos_ are traditional Inuit homes. They are made from snow. Nowadays, most Inuit live in modern houses with many rooms and heating. The Inuit live in small villages in the north far away from big cities. There are schools and hospitals. They can buy food in local shops. Most of the food comes from the south. Fresh food is very expensive. That’s why many Inuit hunt for meat. They hunt for seals, caribou and whales. They also like to catch fish and eat it.
